Lisandro Adriente, born to a lovely Guatamalan family residing in Conch City. But the world has shifted into a darker state, and he and his family were kidnapped. His parents were killed, and he was tortured inside of the El Salvadoran prison he was kept in. A group of sadistic guards decided to torture him to death, by putting molten iron into his bloodstream, but his rage and determination to live were so powerful, that his body harnessed the lava. And now his molten blood boils in the name of rebellion for oppressed peoples, able to shoot it from his fingertips.

The Icebreaker, Lisandro Ardiente, a man imprisoned by the free world, a victim of perceived justice. The fire of anger resides deep in his soul, boiling his blood of molten lava. A desired vengeance against the forces that killed his parents, the forces that tortured him, the forces that turned his body into an inferno.

A bright day dawned upon the southern Floridian metropolis of Conch City, with the lovely breeze swaying the road side palm trees, and the sweet smell of the orange groves up across the Caloosahatchee filling the humid air with a sweet smell. One would find this almost ascending, but true evil finds no beauty in the world. People's lives are never just ruined on gloomy days like in the movies, the worst can happen at the blink of an eye

A little old Dominican woman stepped out of her front door. She straightened her back through a big sniff of the air.

"Ahh, the naranjos. I should run to the supermarket later to grab some. Gracia loves orange custards."

She strolled over to her mailbox. But not even before she passed her small fountain, a group of four men scurried out of the nearby bushes. They charged her, batons drawn, one armed with a taser. She froze in fear, trembling.

The men wore plain clothes, T-shirts and jeans, with the interior outline of vests. Dawned with caps, sunglasses and bandanas.

"Yera Diaz" one man yelled, "freeze, your under arrest!"

In a moment of clarity, Yera shouted "I have my green card! I'm legally here!"

The men disregarded any word she said. They surrounded her, one man forcing her down to the ground.

"Abuela!" little Gracia yelled, crying in fear. One of the batoned men took for the opened door while the three others began to handcuff her, keeping her face in the dirt.

Yera tried to scream but her mouth was covered by one of the officers, then struck in the back by another. "Stop resisting!"

The officer approached the girl, pointed his baton to her teary face. "Go back inside brat" he said. She screamed and tried to hit him with her little arms. The officer, without hesitation, charged his arm to strike. The officer swung, but his arm was grabbed. Then another officer yelled; "It's the Icebreaker!"

The two officers aside stanced up, baton and taser drawn both. Icebreaker stood still and silent, the officer began to sweat--from nervousness and the sudden heat wave. "Freeze! Let go of the officer with your hands up!"

All was still for a moment, before a flash of action. Gracia screamed and ran inside as Icebreaker, with great speed, spun the officer around him and firmly held his body. The taser was shot immediately, striking the held officer in the chest. Before getting electricuted, Icebreaker kicked the officer forward and flipped over the falling, shocked body. The other officers pulled pistols on Icebreaker. They spam fired, but no bullets struck for Icebreaker sprayed a wave of lava from his fingertips in anticipation, melting the bullets instantly.

The sprayed lava covered the taser armed cop. He screamed and threw his taser down. The two armed officers backed off, reloading their pistols. The first officer reloaded, but was quickly dwarfed by a two fingered spray of lava, melting his gun. Icebreaker lunged at that officer, busting his face in with a single punch. The second was too fearful to reload quickly, and his gun was smacked out of his hand. Icebreaker socked his face and dragged him to the fountain. He stuck the cops hand in and released lava into the water. The officer screamed in agony as his hand became engulfed in seering rock. "Fuck cops, fuck fascists."

Afterwards, Icebreaker loaded the injured cops into their van, assisted Yera and Gracia, and later dumped the cops infront of their station.
